

A Guide for Website Contributors

Harry Jivenmukta has set up a website designed to showcase the creative work of people who want to show the world what they are about. If you want a space on this website, you need to see Harry or send him your work. It is a completely free service. This is a guide of how to do it.

This is the home page of

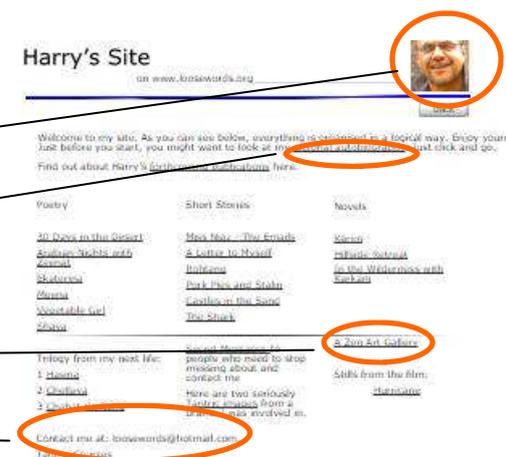

www.loosewords.org

When you click on the Creative People link, you will go to the page shown opposite. Pick a name for yourself. Usually this will be a first name and an initial of your surname. Mine is Harry J. Visitors to the site will click on your link from this page.

When I click on Harry J, this is the homepage that is opened. Have a look on the webpage yourself to see what is possible.

And, of course, collections of poetry, short stories and novels with links, in the middle section of the page.

If you want a space, see Harry or email him at harryjivenmukta@hotmail.co.uk. You can discuss your requirements with him. Once you supply him with the information required, he will design and upload your work. He will then contact you. Check your pages yourself and advise any changes or additions you want. Then, tell all your family and friends around the world where your work can be found.

Sit back and enjoy the moment. It really is a great feeling to know that anyone in the world can now see your creative work. Talk to Harry whenever you have more to add, take away, or change.

Harry says:

'it's so much fun, and very satisfying to see your work on the internet. Go for it now. Don't delay. Don't be shy. Stop thinking about it and simply take the plunge. The world is waiting for you!!'
